

Copyright and press cuttings – an overview

Summary

Copyright protects creative or artistic works. Any cutting supplied as part of a media monitoring service is subject to copyright.

All Press Cuttings Agencies are required to hold copyright licences in order to use magazine and newspaper content. Licences are issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency (CLA), the Newspaper Licensing Agency (NLA) and by individual publishers.

Press Cuttings Agencies pay royalty fees to publishers in order to deliver cuttings to their clients. This fee covers the costs of:

- i) all paper copies we send you
- ii) the delivery of the first copy to you via our electronic service.

Any further reproduction of a cutting requires permission either directly from the publisher or under the terms of an NLA or CLA licence. So, if you do any further copying (including photocopying, faxing, forwarding an email link, having more than one recipient of a digital service) you must first ensure you hold the appropriate licence.

Important Information

All digital cuttings are transmitted via email with links or through a password protected website.

We are required to pass your contact details, including details of your service, to the NLA and CLA as part of our monthly/quarterly royalty return.

Press Cuttings Agencies can only supply cuttings to clients who hold the appropriate licence.

Any external publication of a press cutting will require permission from the publisher.
